What can horses teach us about Leadership?

In June 2015, Globelink Unimar's Executives undergone an inventive leadership and coaching with horses.

An inventive leader is one that always holds a vision to contribute to the greater good. He is open to contingencies and change, and is ready to assume the consequences of his actions, while attempting to achieve his target with passion and conviction.

Working with horses allows the individual to experience leadership principles in a new way. It provides a unique opportunity to learn how to communicate better, remain confident when faced with uncertainty, and how to motivate and encourage those we are attempting to lead. Being with horses provides a great way to experience the leadership skills needed in the workplace today.

Horses sense and respond to a person's intentions, emotions and thoughts that are conveyed subconsciously through body language. Through the experience of observing a horse's response to their requests and directions, each person learns how to communicate more effectively, face their fears and manage their emotions, and become more consistent with their actions. To lead the horse, you have to listen to it, be consistent and clear, and mean it. If you don't provide the clear leadership, your horse will.

Horses have been able to survive on earth for more than 50 million years. They owe this to their highly-developed social intelligence and to their sense of team spirit where each individual is equally important and has a specific duty. With these characteristics, they can give us valuable insights about leadership and teamwork.

Executives whom received this inventive leadership training with horses had a great time while they became aware of their inner strengths and improved their business and social skills.

Globelink Unimar management places great importance on personal development and believes that such trainings will improve the vision of Executives and enable them to make a difference in the highly competitive environment.

China and Australia signs Free Trade Agreement

The China-Australia Free Trade Agreement (ChAFTA) is finally signed in June 2015 following a decade of negotiations.

ChAFTA will unlock significant opportunities for Australia. China is Australia's largest export market for both goods and services, accounting for nearly a third of total exports, and a growing source of foreign investment.

This agreement with China would be worth billions to the Australian economy and would boost jobs. More than 85 per cent of Australian goods exports will be duty free under the agreement, rising to 95 per cent when the agreement is fully implemented. Duties on dairy, beef and seafood are set to be eliminated within years, and the agreement also eliminates all of China's tariffs on Australian resources and energy products. Australian businesses currently face tariffs of up to 40 per cent on goods exported to China.
